Political perspective of gender equality post COVID-19 (What can be done?)

Amelia Womack

Green Party of England and Wales

Amelia Womack is the current Deputy Leader of the Green Party of England and Wales. Amelia's three years as Green Party deputy leader have seen her work across the country, visiting hundreds of local campaigns, events and organisations. She works to raise awareness of local issues while campaigning for change on a national level.

She was elected in 2014 at the age of 29, while still a member of the Young Greens, and has used this platform to highlight problems affecting young people, from tuition fees to zero hour contracts.

She holds a BSc in Environmental Biology and MSc in Environmental Technology. She works across a wide range of social and environmental issues, with a particular focus on women's rights, flooding, climate change and community resilience.
