

Hiroaki DAIMON

Researcher at the Disaster Prevention
Research Institute, Kyoto
University, Japan

Dr. Daimon is Cross-boarder Postdoctoral Research Fellow, Japan Society for the Promotion of Sciences (JSPS) and a researcher at the Disaster Prevention Research Institute, Kyoto University, Japan.

Focusing on disaster volunteerism, he has conducted research advocating a new circuit of volunteerism that affirms "what one owes someone (sense of indebtedness)" as a new circuit of volunteerism. He is currently working at the Disaster Research Center, University of Delaware, USA as a visiting scholar, and has conducted research on business continuity of small businesses during the COVID-19 pandemic through a comparison of Japanese and U.S. case studies (incidentally, he himself was born the son of a family-owned restaurant in a rural town in Japan).
